Feudalism and Manorialism were prominent in the Middle Ages. The complex system of landowners, workers, and other people living on a manor had a great impact on the function of society. Each manor was a community in itself, and they interacted with each other across the land.

The positions of men and women in Medieval Europe were quite varied, each playing a different role in feudal society.

Much of what happened in Medieval Europe is broken down into specific periods, which will be looked at later. The significance of the changes that took place during this time had a great impact on Europe as it is today.
